Cyclosporin A (CsA) is a powerful immunosuppressant widely used in kidney transplantation. It has been shown that CsA has a serious impact on the proliferation and differentiation of human mesenchymal stem cells (hMSCs). However, its impact on hMSCs derived from umbilical cord blood (UCB-hMSCs) has not been examined. The study showed that UCB-hMSCs were sensitive to CsA and the proliferation rate was significantly lower than that of hMSCs derived from bone marrow (BM-hMSCs) and adipose tissue (Ad-hMSCs). Moreover, the morphology, cell cycle, osteogenic and adipogenic differentiation, and chromosomal karyotyping showed that UCB-hMSCs were sensitive to CsA and the changes in UCB-hMSCs differed from those of BM-hMSCs and Ad-hMSCs. UCB-hMSCs treated with CsA for 15 days showed a significant increase in cell apoptosis. Quantitative real-time polymerase chain reaction (PCR) analysis showed that CsA significantly downregulated the expression of osteogenic genes in UCB-hMSCs, but increased the expression of adipogenic genes. CsA decreased the expression of H19 and p57 in UCB-hMSCs and increased the expression of CDKN1A (p21) and BAX. Based on these results, UCB-hMSCs are sensitive to CsA and are less proliferative than BM-hMSCs and Ad-hMSCs. UCB-hMSCs treated with CsA displayed significant changes in growth and differentiation.It is common to install an anti-theft lock onto the rear tail gate of a car or truck.
